Good documentation practices are essential in pharmaceutical manufacturing and form a central part of the quality management system and GMP compliance.

This company-focused course gives employees a common understanding of regulatory requirements for GMP documentation and the rationale behind internal requirements and procedures for good documentation practices.

It contributes to more consistent documentation practices across the organisation.

During the course, employees work with how to complete documentation correctly in practice and how to make corrections in accordance with applicable requirements.

After the course, employees will have an understanding of traceability and know how to write relevant and comprehensive comments in documentation.

The company's own examples and types of documentation can be incorporated into the training, making the learning directly applicable to everyday work.

The course focuses on the connection between thorough documentation and quality assurance, and how employees contribute to this as part of their daily practice in a GMP-regulated organisation.

The training combines presentations, group work and case-based exercises, giving employees practical tools to strengthen documentation practices in their daily work.

This provides a common foundation for correct documentation and the handling of errors and corrections across the organisation.
